NO SECTS IN HEAVEN.

Talking of sects till late one evening. And the conversation drifted to the river. By the side of a darkly flowing stream. And a "churchman" down to the river came. When I heard a strange voice call his name. "Good father stop"—when you cross this tide You must leave your robes on the other side! But the aged father did not mind. And his long gown floated out behind. As down to the stream his way he took. His pale hands clasped a girl's hand. "I'm bored and weary, and when I'm there, I shall want my book of common prayer. And though I put on a starchy gown. I should feel quite lost without my gown." Then he fixed his eyes on the shining bank. But his gown was heavy and held him back. And the worthy brother tried in vain A single step in the flood to gain. "My coat and hat must be on the other side. I cannot go any other way." Then he buttoned his coat straight up to his chin. And steadily, solemnly waded in; And his broad brimmed hat he pulled down tight. Over his forehead, so cold and white; But a strong wind carried away his hat. And a moment he tottered away at that; And then, as he looked on the further shore His coat slipped off and was seen no more. As he entered Heaven all rain and gray Went quietly sailing away. And none of the angels questioned him. About the width of his beaver's brim. Next came Dr. Watts with a bundle of psalms. Tied nicely up in his aged arms. And hymns as many—a very wise thing That he brought in Heaven all rain and gray. But I thought that he heard an anxious sigh. As he saw that the river ran broad and high. And looked rather surprised as one by one The psalms and hymns in the waves went down. And after him with his M. S. S. Came Wesley, the pattern of goodness. But he said, "Dear me what shall I do. The water has soaked them through and through." And there on the river far and wide Away they went down the swollen tide. And the saint, astonished, passed through alone. Without his manuscripts up to the throne. Then gravely walking two saints, by name, Down to the stream together came. "But as they stood at the river's brink I saw one saint from the other shrink. 'Sprinkled or plunged? may I ask you friend, How you attained to life's great end? Perhaps with a few drops on your brow, But I have been dipping you all are now. And I really think it will hardly do. As I'm close communion to cross with you. You're bound to know to the realms of bliss, But you must go that way, and I'll do this.' Then straightway plunging with all his might. Away to the left—his friend to right— Apart they went from this world of sin. But at last together they entered in. And now, when the river was rolling on, A Presbyterian Church went down. Of women there seemed an innumerable throng. Battling men I could count as they passed along. And concerning the road they could never agree. The old or the new way, which it could be, Nor ever a moment seemed to think. That both would lead to the river's brink. And sounds of murmuring and loud came over up from the moving crowd. "You're in the old way I'm in the new. That is the false and this is the true. But the brethren only seemed to speak. Modest the sisters walked and meek. And if ever one of them chanced to say What troubles she had met with on the way. How she longed to pass to the other side. Nor feared to go through the swelling tide. A voice arose from the river's brink. "Let no one speak but the holy men." "Oh let the women keep silence all!" I watched them long in my curious dream. Till they stood by the borders of the stream— Then just as I thought the two ways met. But all the brethren were talking yet. And would talk on till the heaving tide Carried them over side by side— Side by side, for the way was one. The tedious journey of life was done; And all who in Christ the Saviour died Came out alike on the other side. No fears, no crosses, no weeping had they. No groans of silk, nor suits of gray. No needs to guide them, nor M. S. S. For all had put on Christ's righteousness.
